brespondence Interior Journal:-While seated 'neath the cooling shadow f "Itiana's tirotto," environed by mose rocks, dewy ferns and lofty trees, the incliation has crept upon me to indite a letter to you, dear Juttenate expressing my ad miration of this truly wonderful resort. It try to portray the full grandeur of the scenes. This is not my intention; but rather to record the effect that the quirt, the beauty, the loveliness of this place has pon your humble writer.

One of the most notable places is "The Arcade." Several broad walks lead up to the mumil of the mountain, which is dithe summit of the mountain, which is di-rectly in front of the Springs huiding, and over shadows it. Some daring person has over shadows it. Some daring person has (in a jutting rock, which seems as If suspended in the air), erected a tiny log-house To this lofty peak I directed my footstep the morning after my nerival. It was lovely walk ever up through a dim, cool light. After climbing a rustic stair Imbed ded in the mountain, and under a leildg of stone (not unlike the Natural Bridge of toiling brought me to the desired spot. In looking out of the rude window, I, for the first time, realized what attitude I had at tained; yet, I could distinctly see guests playing croquet, and in order to "see and seen," I waved my bat, which was instantly responded to by the flutter of white handkerchief from the gallery.

From thence I went directly to the grea rock, which has been predicted will ultimately fall out and crush the Springs builling. Some years since, it was one vast rock, but there is a fissure from top to base several feet broad. A bridge formed of two mall supplings, a half foot wide, has been laid across the chasen. But, as I looked lownward from "this coping of the world" and saw that not an atom moved the vold nvisible, I shrank back, refusing to cross the fearful place. I next directed no otsteps down a declivity in a rock, at the foot of which was an improvised fence. Climbing this, I was at the entrance of
